| Asynchronous online courses occur through online channels without real-time interaction and are taught 100% online, but do not have an assigned meeting time for the course. When you register for an asynchronous course in MyNIU, it will indicate the course is online (100%) asynchronous where the "room" is listed. There will not be listed course meeting times. |             |   |           |                                |   |  |                       |

Sociology of Food: Food does more than just provide nourishment. In this course we will examine the role of food in the social construction of individual and collective identities; in-group and out-group relations; family, ethnicity, gender, and nation; and global social, political and economic power. Refreshments will be served.

Unveiling the Unknown: A Sociological Inquiry into UFOS, Aliens, and Human Perception: People have anomalous experiences that cannot always be explained by common sense or current scientific theories. Increasingly, the media, government, and scholars are becoming aware of this. This course will investigate UFOS/UAPs, alien contacts, and related otherworldly phenomena. Through videos, readings, and data, we zoom around the world to witness people's experiences with alleged aliens. We take a phenomenological perspective into how they interpret what has happened to them by analyzing eyewitness sightings, contacts, or abductions. We also take a social constructivist view by examining the various agents and institutions who shape and influence people's experiences and perspectives. This includes interrogating the involvement of government/military, media, scientists, entrepreneurs, activists, religions, among others in constructing UFO/alien knowledge.

Gender, War, and Peace: This course draws on gender and peace theory to examine the intersections of gender, violence, and power. We will study the gendered dynamics of war and peace at local, national, and transnational levels in order to better understand gender in violence and peacebuilding interventions. This includes the gendered dynamics throughout stages of war and peace from the buildup to war through creating long-term peace. Topics to be covered include masculinity and femininity under nationalism and militarization, gendered vulnerability in wartime, sexual violence as a tool of warfare, gender and peace negotiations, and postwar renegotiations of gender and community. We will be drawing on material from cases across the world.

This course will focus primarily on the arts of the India, China, parts of Southeast Asia and Japan from prehistoric to early modern times. It will span the breadth of a survey of Asian art, from prehistoric to early modern times, but be topical and selective in approach. The first half of the semester will focus on religious art and the sweep of Buddhist art across the region. The second half of the semester will turn to secular, primarily courtly, art. In doing so, this course will illustrate the ways waves of cross-cultural influence can be traced in the region, as well as distinct differences in the arts. This is an NIU General Education course in the Knowledge Domain: Creativity and Critical Analysis. It is a requirement for Art History and Visual Studies majors. It is an elective for the Minor in Southeast Asian Studies and Certificate of Undergraduate Study in Asian American Studies.¿

This course surveys the art and culture of the ancient Italic people the Etruscans, incorporating the most up-to-date research and recent archaeological discoveries. The course is divided into three parts: (1) an historical introduction, in which we will survey the evidence, general trends and historical development of the Etruscans; (2) thematic topics, in which we will look in depth at particular aspects of their art, society and culture; and (3) a look at contemporary issues, including the debate over their origins and the impact of looting and the modern antiquities trade on their heritage. ARTH 310F is an NIU General Education course in the Knowledge Domain: Society and Culture. ARTH 510F by permit only. Contact sinclair.bell@niu.edu.

This course meets In Person on Tuesdays and Online on Thursdays.

The subject of the course this semester is "What is Medieval Art?" Prompted by the publication of two new textbooks on medieval art and architecture, the first to come out in about 20 years, this course provides an introduction to medieval art while considering how the study of medieval art and architecture has changed in recent years and why. Addressing the decisions that affect the inclusion and exclusion of objects and buildings when formulating a history of medieval art, we will examine how issues that concern us in the present inform the questions we ask about the past and the resulting story we tell. This course examines themes in the global history of graphic design, illustration, and new media with an emphasis on international and transnational connections. Topics will include the relationship between fine art and design, the significance of history to the field of design, and the contextualization of visual communication within the more general fields of design and media studies. We will consider diverse theoretical approaches in texts by nineteenth and twentieth-century designers as well as by contemporary design critics and historians. This is an NIU General Education course in the Knowledge Domain: Creativity and Critical Analysis and Pathway: Global Connections. This course is currently closed. The world of ukiyo-e or Japanese multicolor woodblock prints from the early modern period (Edo period, 17th-19th c.) is extremely rich in technical innovation, styles, subject-matter, and genres. There are also exquisite paintings on hanging scrolls, handscrolls, and folding screens in the ukiyo-e style. This seminar will ask you to gain a basic knowledge of the ukiyo-e craft, artistry, and cultural contexts, as well as to gain fresh insight and a deeper understanding of the art form achieved through solid analytical and interpretive skills and original research. There will be a collaborative project online with students enrolled in Yamaguchi Prefectural University in Japan that will provide opportunities to broaden perspectives and opportunities to learn from peers. In the process, students will be learning valuable life skills;about visual analysis and interpretation, research and creation of arguments, as well as professionalism in organization and communication. The arts of Southeast Asia are best understood through the religions, material cultures and natural environments that prompted their creation. This means there is an array of themes and contexts to explore, as there is a variety of religions, an abundance of nature motifs, and a diversity of materials used, such as ivory, gold, silver, lacquer, silk, stone, and ceramics, not to mention the varied modes of individual artistic creation and self-expression. This seminar will study the arts of Southeast Asia while reflecting on the ways in which countries of mainland and insular Southeast Asia (as cultures and societies) have interacted in the past or respond now to their present environment. A final project for this class will be the research and planning of new displays on campus using objects held in university collections. This will introduce students to important concerns related to issues of contemporary museology and museum display practice. Enrollment in ARTH 457 by permit only. Contact: rhouze@niu.edu.

In this course we will study the wide variety of methods developed by art historians and cultural theorists from the 18th century to the 21st. We will chart scholars' invention of a comprehensive and dynamic history for (high art) and other visual creations. Structured like a seminar, this class will empower us to collaborate on analyses of the course readings. Students will develop an intensive semester-long project of research and writing on a topic of their choice. ARTH 486 is required for art history majors. We welcome students who work in other disciplines, not just art history specialists. Having taken a 300-level course in art history is highly recommended. ARTH486 requires a permit. Please contact Prof. Evans at sevans@niu.edu for more information about the course and the permit.

In this course we will study the wide variety of methods developed by art historians and cultural theorists from the 18th century to the 21st. We will chart scholars' invention of a comprehensive and dynamic history for high art and other visual creations. Structured like a seminar, this class will empower us to collaborate on analyses of the course readings. Students will develop an intensive semester-long project of research and writing on a topic of their choice. ARTH 586 is required for most M.A. students in Art History and Visual Studies and for students pursuing the Certificate of Graduate Study in Art History and Visual Studies. We welcome students who work in other disciplines, not just art history specialists. Having taken a previous course in art history is highly recommended

The arts of Southeast Asia are best understood through the religions, material cultures and natural environments that prompted their creation. This means there is an array of themes and contexts to explore, as there is a variety of religions, an abundance of nature motifs, and a diversity of materials used, such as ivory, gold, silver, lacquer, silk, stone, and ceramics, not to mention the varied modes of individual artistic creation and self-expression. This seminar will study the arts of Southeast Asia while reflecting on the ways in which countries of mainland and insular Southeast Asia as cultures and societies have interacted in the past or respond now to their present environment. A final project for this class will be the research and planning of new displays on campus using objects held in university collections. This will introduce students to important concerns related to issues of contemporary museology and museum display practice.

This course looks at how race and ethnicity were visually signaled and expressed by different cultures over time, from the ancient Mediterranean to contemporary art. While the course will focus on the visual and material evidence, it will also emphasize the close readings of texts in order to survey past and current methodological approaches. Topics to be addressed include racial theory, social practice, representation, and reception history.

Asynchronous online courses occur through online channels without real-time interaction and are taught 100% online, but do not have an assigned meeting time for the course. When you register for an asynchronous course in MyNIU, it will indicate the course is online (100%) asynchronous where the "room" is listed. There will not be listed course meeting times.

Asynchronous online courses occur through online channels without real-time interaction and are taught 100% online, but do not have an assigned meeting time for the course. When you register for an asynchronous course in MyNIU, it will indicate the course is online (100%) asynchronous where the "room" is listed. There will not be listed course meeting times.

Asynchronous online courses occur through online channels without real-time interaction and are taught 100% online, but do not have an assigned meeting time for the course. When you register for an asynchronous course in MyNIU, it will indicate the course is online (100%) asynchronous where the "room" is listed. There will not be listed course meeting times.
