NGOLD Co-Sponsors Peace-building Seminar

DeKalb, IL – The Center for NGO Leadership and Development (NGOLD) at Northern Illinois University, the Department of Anthropology, and the Center for Southeast Asian Studies collaborated to offer a seminar and roundtable on December 1.

The event, titled Peace-building in Conflict Regions of Southeast Asia, featured work from NIU faculty and visiting scholars from Thailand who have expertise in peace and conflict studies in Southeast Asia. A highlight was the regional peace-fostering initiatives that create an opportunity for dialogue, consultation, and monitoring of conflict.

Judith Hermanson, director of NGOLD, and Kendall Thu, professor and chair of the Department of Anthropology, offered opening remarks. Presenters focused on the increasingly active role of Southeast Asian nongovernmental organizations and universities in developing new peace norms and peace education, monitoring compliance with human rights standards, and peace advocacy.

NGOLD was established in 2010 as NIU’s resource for excellence in the study, research and practice of nongovernmental organizations. Its mission is to enhance and strengthen civil society through nonprofits and other avenues of public service. To do this, NGOLD provides comprehensive programming and services to students, faculty, researchers and nonprofit organizations by focusing on four primary areas: Academics, Research, Service, and Enhanced Practice.

In addition to the interdisciplinary CLCE undergraduate major, NGOLD offers a certificate program that allows students in other majors to gain specialization in nonprofit leadership. To learn more, please visit http://www.niu.edu/ngold/.
