This course explores established and emergent scholarly and popular discourses about identity formation in relation to modern and contemporary visual, cinematic, and written arts. We will look at concepts and representations of gender, race, class, ability, and sexuality. Rather than assume that our identities are purely personal or purely social we will examine the roles of art and art-writing in an ongoing negotiation between choice and imposition. We will discuss the film Children of Men, Afro-futurism in various mediums, the body in pain, essentialist and constructionist feminism, and alternative gender identities. Four classes will be set aside for students' choice of material. In addition to readings, a semester-long research project and an exhibition review are required. ARTH 655 is by permit only.

Washi is a 1500-year old Japanese handmade paper tradition that is integrated throughout Japan's culture. The long plant fibers used to make washi coupled with its unique layering technique provide a strength not found in other handmade paper traditions. Washi functions on many levels in Japan such as festival and ritual objects, Buddhist sutras and scrolls, currency, paper clothing, Shimenawa folded paper used as a protection symbol at the entrance of buildings, and Shoji screen dividers found in the traditional Japanese home. Historically many artists have capitalized on washi's distinct archival and paper strength properties including Rembrandt who used washi for sketching. Washi in the 21st C. has been fully embraced by artists and architects and used experimentally in installation, sculptural, and interior architecture capacities. This class will explore a variety of 2D and 3D Japanese papermaking techniques including: Nagashizuki sheet formation, Suminagashi ink marbling, embossing, embedding, lamination, watermarking, and simple book structures. Discussion of various Japanese plant fibers and their distinct properties will also be included. Students are strongly encouraged to apply the technical and conceptual aspects of Nagashizuki toward the development of personal work. Class will include demos and lectures however much time will be devoted to working on independent projects in an open studio environment.
